The county summer recreation program at North End school opened last week. Directing the playground activities is Mrs. Theresa Sommerkamp, 6-F Parkway, a second grade teacher at North End. Assisting her is Dwight Schegel of Chillum. Dwight is a sophomore at Scranton College, where he has an athletic scholarship. Twelve each weekday morning, from twelve to one parents are urged to keep their children home. The program continues from 1 p.m. until 5 p.m. Children from six to sixteen are eligible to participate in arts and crafts, for which there is a nominal charge, athletic activities, quiet games, storytelling, etc. Dwight's plans include dancing, and he is eager to organize a softball team for the older boys. Mrs. Sommerkamp needs our assistance, so—

city awarded traffic plaques

City manager Charles McDonald announced the receipt by the city of two safety awards for the year 1955. The plaques, awarded by the National Safety Council and the Maryland State Safety Department, respectively, were plaquidits for the "no traffic fatality" record in Greenbelt for the past year.

McDonald, along with councilmen Robert Hurst and James Smith, attended a symposium conducted by the Maryland Municipal League at Ocean City June 28-30, in which they participated in discussions on the problems of governing small municipalities. Another Greenbelter, George Panagoulis, county police chief, conducted a discussion of police activities in small communities. McDonald headed a discussion group dealing with the duties of city clerks and treasurers. The Greenbelt contingent reported very satisfactory and rewarding results from having attended.

The manager also reported that considerable progress had been made thus far in the re-surfacing of parking courts -- about ten having been completed and ready for marking off into parking spaces.

a communication "is the problem real"

A consumers' cooperative is primarily a joint business venture. Unlike other business ventures, its first loyalty is to consumers and it organizes their interest in the form of ownership. Like organized labor, it aims at a more equitable distribution of wealth and income. This is an ethical ideal, but the means of action are mainly economic. Thus, the real interest a person has in the cooperative is measured in terms of the labor and money he puts into it, rather than the number of words spoken at meetings.

Cooperatives can no longer survive as comfortable little neighborhood clubs. Do we think our GCS is too large when it does $9 million of business a year compared with $289 million a year done by Food Fair, one of the smaller chains? Recently, at one of the Monday cooperative luncheons at the Brookings Institution, I met a lady director of the London Cooperative Society, which has hundreds of stores and 1,125,000 members. It is only one of four large co-ops in and around London. Do we really think our progress should stop with a few stores on the fringe of our metropolitan area?

The British cooperators not only serve large numbers of people but they even elect members of Parliament to represent their economic and social philosophy. Is that undemocratic?

One of our troubles, locally, besides our provincialism, has been the failure to understand the difference between being an owner and being a director or a manager of our business. The share owner does not have the whole responsibility for running the business, as some individuals seem to feel they have. That would be burdensome and inefficient. Just suppose that all business in our country were organized cooperatively. Suppose each of us were a member of every enterprise from which we made any kind of purchase. Would, any of us have time for personally directing the affairs of every enterprise? Wouldn't somebody have to specialize?

Another cause of misunderstanding has been the belief that only meetings, with speeches and debates, can determine and express the wishes of the share owners. Today, fortunately, there are also other and perhaps better means of communication. The need for better communication in GCS between management, board, membership, and public is recognized by all, but disputes have arisen about the improvements thus far attempted. One aid to better communication would be to make clear in each message which group or interest is talking to what audience. Modern mass media are essential to inform the members and public. Some persons fear that our ethical motive will be forgotten, merely because it is not displayed in every situation. That, however, would not be good tactics at all times.

While the membership meetings are undoubtedly important and can be helpful, there are many cooperators, with no taste for forensics, who find them tiresome and contentious, and prefer to cooperate in other ways. The must be many, like me, who have other things to do, prefer to be lay members, and do not want to run the show.

Controversy should not be cultivated or encouraged for its own sake, nor is it true that where the most controversy flourishes, there is the greatest freedom. Where there is controversy, there may be some cause for dissatisfaction which ought to be removed. Or again, there may just be misunderstanding, or lack of information, or uncritical use of words that arouse emotions but have not been defined by the disputants—such as monopoly, democracy, nature, justice, property, or the "green belt."

Certainly, there should be a chance for friendly debate wherever we need to search for a solution to a real problem. First, however, we should inquire, "Is the problem real?" and "What are the facts?" Your newspaper has been of great value as a forum for discussion of community problems, but may I suggest that in the future, no comment for insinuation be made in the editorial column on any matter about which the relevant facts have not been reported as objectively as possible in the news columns?

a communication 'mess of pottage'

Open Letter to Westminster Co-op:

I understand that your thriving group has voted to become a part of the "largest retail co-op" in the United States. And the management-board of G.C.S. is eager to take you in, too. In fact their efforts to get out the required number of proxies to change the charter have been quite frenzied.

I think you should know that the failure to vote isn't only the inertia and disinterest one can expect in any large corporation—particularly among uninformed stockholders. Some of it is an intentional, last-ditch effort to control our erstwhile co-op from galloping madly off in all directions.

The fact that Westminster is in one of those directions might make you the accidental beneficiary of our efforts. Unless you insist on selling your birthright for a mess of pottage!

To you really want to trade a lively, local interest in your co-op for the frustration of beating your collective heads against a wall of indifference (to members and cooperative principles), distance, and lack of information? No amount of money (in the form of dividends and refunds) can make up to your members for losing control of their store in exchange for the dubious privilege of electing powerless congress members at an advisory area meeting in order to hold an "annual meeting" with 50 members present and 2500 proxies out of 8000 members. This is a co-op?

Of course besides all those juicy dividends and refunds you won't have to think for yourselves (in fact, I dare you!), your problems will all be solved for you (by suburbanites far removed from Westminster in distance and temperament), your educational program is done for you (if you find one, let me know), and your promotion and advertising are all taken care of by experts (I hope you are getting a cut rate).

This isn't the way you have heard it I'm sure. Maybe you'll have to find out too late—the hard way. The way we did. I hope not.

Cooperatively yours,

Bruce Bowman

'moral factor'

I would like to take this time to express my sincere thanks for the News Review that I have been receiving since my arrival on my tour of duty with the United States Army in Europe. I can't begin to say what a great moral factor it has been and how it has given me many hours of happy reading and news from home. I would like to give my complete and heartiest thanks and say that I will soon be home among the civilian ranks with all my friends. Thanks again, and best wishes to you and the News Review staff.

Honestly now,
who "runs" your insurance company?

You probably call it "my insurance company" when you speak of it. But think a moment. Is it yours? Do you have any part in its operation? Do you help form its policies? We, at Nationwide, think you should. We believe a company works best for people when those people help run the company. That's why Nationwide Insurance, has Policyholders Advisory Committees which offer policy owners a real "say" in company affairs. Unique? Yes! and we're sure it's one reason why there are more than 2,000,000 Nationwide Insurance owners.
